living cultures

■ Mi'kmaq

Unama'ki, otherwise known as Cape Breton Island, has been home to Mi'kmaw people from time immemorial. The Mi'kmaq enrich the Island with their legends, art, music, spirituality, history and language. In Unama'ki the culture is thriving with five Indigenous communities. You can immerse yourself in this rich culture with Eskasoni Cultural Journeys, Membertou Heritage Park, Wagmatcook Cultural Centre, Canal Landing and the Skye River Trail in We'koqmaq.

■ Acadian

Since 1713, the Acadian spirit and joie de vivre has thrived among Nova Scotia's Acadian French population. Today's Acadians are descendants of the first European settlers. On Cape Breton Island, the Chéticamp and Isle Madame/Louisdale regions are hubs of this vibrant culture. Mask making at La Centre de la Mi-Carême, rug hooking at Les Trois Pignons, cultural experiences at Centre la Picasso, and music and dance performances in various venues are just some of the ways you can celebrate the rich and storied history of Cape Breton's Acadian culture. And be sure to look for traditional Acadian dishes such as fish cakes or meat pies at eateries in those regions.

■ Gaelic

In the 1800s, Gaelic speaking immigrants, mainly from the highlands and islands of Scotland with a smaller number from Ireland, came by the tens of thousands and made Cape Breton Island their home. To this very day, Gaelic is spoken at the Gaelic College / Colaíse na Gàidhlig, the Highland Village / Baile nan Gàidheal and in a number of communities. To participate in the culture, visit the aforementioned sites, join in a square dance, sing along at a milling frolic, learn the art of weaving or research your Gaelic roots.
